Safe Drinking Water Monitoring Program

Charlene Campbell-Wood

Vancouver's drinking water is regularly monitored by City staff, Vancouver Coastal Health, and Metro Vancouver. It meets water quality standards and is safe to drink.

- How we protect drinking water
- Drinking water quality reports and test results

Water quality concerns such as unusual colour, taste, odour, and appearance can be temporarily caused by water main leaks or breaks, annual flushing of the water distribution system, chlorine, and turbidity (cloudiness).

Resolving water quality concerns often involves a complete investigation to determine the cause of the problem.

How we protect drinking water

Several measures are taken to protect the quality of Vancouver's drinking water.

1. At the source, Metro Vancouver has a comprehensive system of testing raw water for quality:
 - Filtering and disinfecting the water to prevent or remove biological pathogens.
 - Monitoring the water quality before delivery to member municipalities.
2. Once water enters Vancouver's distribution system, the City of Vancouver further tests water quality from 53 dedicated water sampling stations. Water must comply with the health standards set out in the BC Drinking Water Regulation.
3. Additionally, the City's water-distribution system does not contain lead pipes. Lead pipes and components were eliminated in the 1980s and 1990s. We routinely test water flowing through our distribution system and can confirm lead levels are always within Health Canada's guidelines.
4. The City conducts field testing for physical and chemical contaminants. Bacteriological samples are collected and sent to the BC Centre for Disease Control for further analysis, providing another level of monitoring through a third party.

The Modern City Begins: A Virtual Stroll through Vancouver's Industrial Waterfront

Our next Virtual Stroll on May 15 will delve into the history of Vancouver's busy industrial waterfront.

As Canada's largest port city and a gateway to global markets, the waters and shores of Burrard Inlet are an important part of Vancouver's industrial, commercial and transportation infrastructure. This natural harbour was one of the engines of non-native settlement with the development of the Hastings Mill and the transcontinental railway terminus. For our last Virtual Stroll of the spring season, civic historian John Atkin will take a closer look at the history and surviving heritage that can be found on the shore, including a fish cannery and one of the largest producers of pre-fabricated buildings.

Hands of Knowledge May 15 to September 26, 2021

Opening Celebration: Online Saturday, May 15 at 1 pm. We invite you to explore the exhibition virtually and meet the artists and Guest Curator.

Hands of Knowledge is a collaborative exhibition featuring six contemporary Indigenous women artists, developed by Ts'msyen curator Joanne Finlay. Dale Marie Campbell, Kelli Clifton, Pearl Innis, Marie Oldfield, Arlene Ness, and Patricia June Vickers each celebrate the traditional knowledge of women through contemporary carvings, weavings and paintings. Exploring sight, time, supernatural energy and spirituality, the artists connect to personal and family history and stories passed down to them as part of their lineage, to view how women have influenced their work.

Bill Reid, Village Model, c.1958

Courtesy of the Museum of Anthropology, The University of British Columbia, Vancouver, Canada A8251 a-l, A8253 a-b, A4482, 2630/1

After a short time studying pole carving alongside Kwakwaka'wakw master-carver Mungo Martin, Bill Reid was awarded a major carving project at the University of British Columbia, to reconstruct a section of a Haida village—two houses and seven poles. Working with artist Doug Cranmer and others, Reid essentially taught himself the craft of pole-making. The project took five years, from 1958-1962. Bill created this maquette out of paper and wood to illustrate his plans. The fragile model is over 60 years old and is currently on display as part of To Speak With A Golden Voice.

Workshop Update

Last month's popular Well-Made Object Workshop – Neon Reconciliation Redux: Online Painting Workshop with Luke Parnell invited participants to paint their own ideas of reconciliation. We are pleased to share the completed collaboration by the workshop participants (although we are still missing a few panels!). Through conversation and creativity, we can all contribute towards a better world. The end result is a miniature version of Neon Reconciliation Explosion, the work that is currently on exhibition at the Gallery.
